Dear Miss Parlow

I am writing with the strains of the wondrous César Franck still echoing in the air, to thank you, more than words can say, for the wonderful joy that the music of your Great Quartet gave to me this afternoon and to my sister. She had been

At for some time; had studied the violin for years with Frank Blackford, and so to venture out today and to hear one playing brought a sense of new life to her. That is what your music must do for very many people!

I hoped to be able to speak to Mrs. Parlor - but many people had the same desire, and so perhaps you will convey my greetings to her. Mr. Armstrong has a little table over the telephone, which I always enjoy.

To you, Mrs. Miss Parlor, my deep appreciation of the beautiful and thrilling work of today, sincere thanks and love from Fannie Brown.
